annexation, the subject will be thrashed out, if ever it comes up in a town meeting. Meanwhile it would be wise to get the opinion of those who live on Hollister Heights. Many of them belong to the parish of St. James and come to church in town. Already this town is but a narrow strip bordered by the Housatonic river, and it can hardly afford to lose any more territory. There are two sides to every question, and this one is given as the view held by many residents.

Rev. C. S. Bullock was in Buffalo on Thursday, but was expected at home some time to-day. If he comes he will probably preach in the Neighborhood church to-morrow.

Even if it did rain the strawberries and cream served by the Methodists on Thursday evening was tempting enough to draw out quite a number of people. The weather acts, whenever the Methodists give a festival, as if a Baptist entertainment was in prour. Craft - The Shakespearian Recital -Brilliant Audience-Sunday Services — The Annexation Scheme Whist Items-Birthday Party.

More than one hundred people assembled at Red Men's hall last night to listen to Rev. E. J. Craft's masterly rendition of portions of Shakespeare's Julius Caesar, Richard III, and the Taming of the Shrew. It is a long time since such an interesting renderful and perfound interpretation wonderful and profound interpretation of the immortal poet has been heard, not only in this town, but in any other Mr. Craft is a past master as an orator, he has a prodigious memory and recited his lines for an hour and a half without the least hesitation or a single break. He would rank well with the best Shakespearian actors teen on the American stage for many years. He is more like Edwin Booth rears. He is more like Edwin Booth than like Irving, who was more intense and dramatic, but Mr. Craft can be compared with Forest, or Bandmann, or any other of the great actors, in that he is more dignified, more profound, more self-poised in his manner and utterance. It was an intense delight to listen to him and all the more remarkable in that he had no stage effects to help out the imagination and took all the characters himself. He began by alluding to the controversy about the authorship of the Shakespeare dramas, and was magination and took all the characters himself. He began by alluding to the controversy about the authorship of the Shakespeare dramas, and was content to give the praise to Shakespeare whom he considered a transcendent genuis, towering above all other men in the field of literature, as a mighty oak towers in the forest or a cloud capped mountain lifts its head above the rest of the range. He spoke of the poet's early life and was rather glad that he left school before he had received a classical education otherwise, said Mr. Craft, he would have been a mere imitator. Now we have an original man, and we know him as he was. Mr. Craft first gave the conspiracy scene in the senate chamber when Julius Ceaser was stabbed to death. It was very graphic and reminded one of the masterly picture by Gerome which hangs in the Corcoran gallery at Washington. The speech of Mark Anthony at the functional of Caeser was rendered in a very pleture by Gerome which hangs in the Corcoran gallery at Washington. The speech of Mark Anthony at the funeral of Caesar was rendered in a very powerful manner, as were all the other selections which were given from the three plays making up the program. A sketch of the situation, time and history of each drama was given, before the verses were recited. The entertainment was concluded with an original and very dramatic rendering of Poe's Raven. Mr. Craft thinks the "Leonora," is a synonym for lost opportunities which come but once to a man, and that the croaking of the raven is but an expression of despair. He considers this poem to be the finest plece of American literature yet written.

One of the surprises at the recent birthday celebration of Mr. John Holmes was a fine large birthday cake made by Mrs. Samuel W. Beardslee. It had 12 candles each representing 5 years, and was both artistic and palatable.

If the question ever comes to a vote in town regarding the annexation of Hollister Heights to Bridgeport. It may well be expected that a vigorous opposition will be manifested. There are those who look upon the proposition as a political move, for the purpose of preserving the balance of power and permitting things to run on in the same old way they have been going for many years. The town may be very conservative, in spots, but there are those who fancy it will be a good thing to give the dry bones, if there are any, a stirring now and then. It is known that the town is heavily in debt, and there may be heavily in debt, and there may be some who believe that if Bridgeport will assume that portion of the debt

After the adjournment of the con-

After the adjournment of the con vention, a meeting of the newly elect-ed officers and of the board of trustees will be held. The program provides for a repeti-tion of the plan adopted for the Miltion of the plan adopted for the Mil-waukee convention a year ago by which several addresses of noted men will be given showing the attitude of the economist and publicist toward the brewing industry. At the Milwaukee convention the brewers were addressed by men of national prominence who urged the liquor men to abolish the abuses of the saloon, and the open meeting this year will be devoted to addresses by other men whose names are well-known in the world of public men.
